New Briefs Summarize Research on Domestic Radicalization and Violent Extremism

NIJ has released four new “Five Things” briefs to help the field prevent and respond to radicalization and violent extremism. Each brief contains five critical facts based on recent NIJ-sponsored research:

Five Things About Individuals Who Engage in Violence Extremism and Similar Offenses tells us about identifying people at risk of committing these offenses, as well as strategies to help mitigate the risk of someone carrying out such acts.

Five Things About the Role of the Internet and Social Media in Domestic Radicalization provides insight into how the internet and social media may both promote and prevent radicalization outcomes.

Five Things About the Role of Social Networks in Domestic Radicalization provides insights into how social networks may either facilitate or prevent radicalization processes and disengagement efforts.

Five Things About Community-Based Terrorism Prevention Programs shares how prevention programs can be designed and implemented at the community level and the most promising practices for addressing radicalized individuals before their ideologies manifest into violence.

What NIJ Research Tells Us About Domestic Terrorism

NIJ has funded over 50 research projects on domestic radicalization that have led to a better understanding of the processes and factors that increase the risk of radicalizing to violence, and how best to prevent and respond to violent extremism. A new NIJ Journal article details the key findings we've discovered, and highlights what these findings implicate for policy and practice as organizations seek to advance violence prevention and response efforts.
