Hello colleagues.

I'm happy to share that I am part of the editorial team that has launched a new criminology journal! \(De\)constructing Criminology: International Perspectives, has as its editorial team, colleagues from South Africa, the UK, and MRU.

The journal provides a broad forum to deconstruct criminology, its established power structures, and the dominant understandings of criminology and its adjacent disciplines.

DCIP welcomes research and scholarship in criminology that extends beyond the global west and north, or to extend understandings of decolonization, or to advance discussions or critiques of issues in crime, law, offending, victimisation, criminalisation, and our justice systems. DCIP also welcomes research and scholarship that speaks to how we create knowledge, transfer knowledge, and how it intersects with pedagogical approaches, practice, or research within criminology and its adjacent disciplines.

We are launching a call for reviewers and a call for abstracts. I invite you to submit to both!

Abstracts due by January 10, 2024.

Please feel free to share this invitation with your colleagues and students too.
