81% of women musicians in the Scottish folk music scene who participated in a new survey have been sexually assaulted or harassed

Four in five women musicians, who participated in a recent study, have experienced sexual violence and harassment while working or taking part in the Scottish folk music scene, according to new survey findings published today (Thurs 22 Jan).

Researchers based at the Scottish Centre for Crime and Justice Research at the University of Glasgow, surveyed 409 women musicians, most of whom were working musicians (89%), music teachers (29%) or music students (11%).

The findings reveal that while the Scottish folk scene was described as welcoming, nurturing, and culturally important, for many women musicians' positive experiences of music-making coexist with experiences of inequality, harm, and exclusion.

They disclosed personal experiences which included intrusive sexualised comments and advances, pressure to engage in sexual activities, harassment and stalking, domestic abuse, sexual assault and rape:

- 75% sexualised questions or remarks,
- 51% unsolicited sexual advances,
- 42% non-consensual sexual touching,
- 28% pressure to engage in any sexual activities,
- 21% stalking or harassment,
- 17% online abuse,
- 17% sexual assault/or raped,
- 13% domestic abuse.
